The Pillar of Trust:

Trust is the foundation of organizational development and sustainability. This is because organizations characterized by healthy trust, experience half the average turnover of industry peers, higher profitability and engaged employees. Neuroscience shows us that people act their way into believing rather than think their way into acting and emotional intelligence is the key to acting your way into being trustworthy and trusting. The Change-Based Organization:

In an age of uncertainty, change has become a constant so, organizational agility is now non-negotiable. To achieve agility, new leadership competencies are becoming more important. Ones that build lasting work relationships and networks that support optimized flow and bring about balance. Learn more about Yvette's IFBSM framework that can position your organization for sustainable growth.

Leading with Emotional Intelligence:

Studies show 65% of organizational challenges are relational, yet emotional intelligence is not always an organizational priority. Navigating Office Politics with Integrity:
